JACK HOLLINGSWORTH

Leading Expert in iPhone Photography

Jack Hollingsworth is widely recognized as one of the most experienced and influential educators in the field of iPhone photography.

With a camera in his hand since 1975 and shooting exclusively with iPhones since 2011, Jack brings a rare combination of deep photographic history and long-term mobile-first mastery to his teaching. He is not teaching theory from the sidelines—he is teaching from lived, daily practice. Fifteen years. Over one million photographs. More than 60 countries. Fourteen iPhone generations. Few educators in this space can claim that level of continuity, volume, and real-world use.

Jack's reputation as a leading expert comes not from hype, but from consistency. He has spent more than a decade teaching iPhone photography to thousands of students through online courses, live workshops, immersive field experiences, cruises, lectures, and long-form educational programs. His teaching spans beginners to advanced photographers, yet remains grounded, practical, and immediately applicable.

What sets Jack apart as an educator is his ability to simplify without dumbing down. He demystifies the iPhone camera by stripping away noise, jargon, and intimidation—helping students understand what actually matters, what doesn't, and why. His teaching style is direct, human, and experience-based, designed to replace confusion with confidence.

Jack currently produces online video courses, teaches ongoing in-person field workshops, and leads extended photographic learning experiences that blend instruction, shooting, critique, and real-world application. His workshops are known for being immersive, focused, and transformative—not just skill-building, but perspective-shifting.

Students often describe Jack as equal parts instructor, translator, and guide. He doesn't just teach which buttons to press—he teaches how to see, how to slow down, how to trust one's instincts, and how to build a sustainable photographic practice using a camera that is always within reach.

Jack's authority in the iPhone photography space is reinforced by his long-standing advocacy for treating the iPhone as a serious photographic tool, a position he has held since the earliest days of mobile photography. His work has been recognized by Apple, and his teaching philosophy continues to influence how photographers around the world approach mobile image-making.

Based in Austin, Texas, Jack remains deeply active—teaching, shooting, refining curriculum, and expanding educational offerings. He is not winding down. He is building momentum.

For those seeking not just instruction, but clarity, confidence, and direction in iPhone photography, Jack Hollingsworth stands at the top of the field.
